Asia requires more than US$1.1 trillion in climate finance annually yet faces an estimated US$800 billion funding gap. As businesses rethink what sustainable growth really means, this session explores a central question: how do we unlock the capital required for meaningful change to create a sustainable future? We will explore how emerging environmental markets and blended financing models are shaping the next era of corporate climate transition in Asia.

As emerging markets across the region launch new carbon pricing instruments, how do we ensure environmental policy instruments (CPIs) are effective and well-designed to support green growth? Focusing on Southeast Asia, this session will explore new carbon taxes, emissions trading system (ETS) pilot developments, early-stage implementation challenges, and the critical role of the private sector in ensuring effectiveness and credibility.

Breakout 2 – Scaling Technology-Based Carbon Removals: From Pilots to Market

Direct air capture, biochar, enhanced rock weathering (ERW) and other novel carbon removal approaches are moving beyond pilots and seeing significant premiums in the carbon market - but the scale remains limited. This session examines what it will take to deploy technology-based carbon dioxide removal (CDR) at commercial scale in APAC, by enhancing methodological approaches and strengthening long-term demand signals.

15:30-16:20 Breakout 3 – China’s Carbon Markets & Climate Leadership: Growth, Reform and Future Developments

As geopolitical tensions rise and priorities shift, the durability of climate commitments is under pressure. Some countries have stepped back from the Paris Agreement, while compliance carbon markets face growing uncertainty over political support and ambition. Against this backdrop, China’s commitment to its climate goals is firm. China’s ETS continues to expand—moving toward an absolute cap, increasing auctioning, and covering key emitting sectors. This panel will examine the resilience of China’s decarbonisation pathway, its potential role in supporting international cooperation through Article 6 and Belt and Road initiatives, and what lies ahead for carbon markets in China.

Breakout 4 – Sustainable AI Infrastructure: Greening the Data Center Boom

Rapid expansion of Artificial Intelligence is accelerating the growth of data centers across Asia, resulting in a sharp increase in energy demand. As governments and corporations pursue their decarbonisation targets, the region faces tough trade-offs. This session explores how to power this infrastructure with clean energy, minimise environmental impacts using carbon markets, and maximise AI's potential to support climate solutions.

16:30-17:30 Plenary 2 – What's Next for Asia's Growing Compliance Carbon Markets?
Emissions trading systems are rapidly expanding across Asia-Pacific, with varying design and trajectories.
